Dear Fueled Content Design team,

Content-heavy products ask people to make sense of a lot before they can act. Your Content Solutions role interests me because it brings information structure, reusable design patterns, and client communication into the same work. I would like to join Fueled's contractor network and contribute the product design and research experience shown in this selection.

At FactorLab, I developed About Me insight widgets for SmartTagIt: summaries, recommendations, Simple 7, comparisons, and accomplishments. I explored their order and density and raised questions about how people would interpret them. A comparison that says someone mentions fatigue less often still needs context before it can be treated as good or bad. I used those interpretation questions to guide the interface discussion with the team.

I also designed Flint's mobile question entry, waiting, and recovery states, connecting the flow and next actions in engineering walkthroughs. At Oak AI, I translated usability findings into navigation and login-feedback recommendations and collaborated with the lead UX designer on mockups. These projects show how I move from an unclear problem to an alternative that clients and teammates can discuss.

Fueled's work with PMC, including tools for editorial workflows and content discovery, is relevant to the problems I enjoy working through. My strongest demonstrated overlap is information hierarchy, reusable interfaces, and human-AI interaction. I would bring that foundation to your CMS-driven projects while learning the team's content models and publishing constraints. My ASU instructional-design work and technical communication background also help me organize content around what a person needs to understand and do.

I bring six years of Figma experience. I am based in Mesa, Arizona, authorized to work in the United States without sponsorship, and available to start as soon as possible during U.S. business hours. I would welcome a conversation about the content and product work coming through your contractor network.

Thank you,
Kyle Hobson
